Snow cover conditions and avalanche danger: In the morning superficial layers are characterised by load-bearing melt-freeze crusts and icy sections, so the snowpack is well-consolidated and stable. Zero-degree line at 3000 m so, during the warm hours around midday, the sun leads to melting and possible isolated releases of humid or wet snow from steepest sunny slopes and under rocks. In the same conditions triggering of surface layers of humid or wet snow will be possible when transiting on skis. Forecast danger level: 1 (low) increasing to 2 (moderate) from late morning, throughout the mountain territory.

Weather by OSMER - ARPA FVG:
Sky generally variable. Possible clouds and light precipitations in the Cadore area.

Snow cover conditions and avalanche danger: Variable sky with decreasing temperatures and zero-degree line at 2400 m. The snowpack will be characterised by generally load-bearing melt-freeze crusts in the morning. Due to cloudiness, releases of humid or wet snow will be possible from very steep slopes under rocks below 2000-2100 m during warm hours. Forecast danger level: 1 (low) throughout the territory.

Forecast for Sunday 02 April 2017, reliability: 70%

Weather by OSMER - ARPA FVG:

Variable cloudiness. Rainfalls or showers will be possible locally.

Snow cover conditions and avalanche danger: Generally cloudy sky. Rainfalls may be possible but avalanche danger will remain unchanged. Snowfalls above 2000 m. Widespread cloudiness will compound the formation of melt-freeze crusts. From mid-morning, during warm hours, releases of humid or wet snow will be possible on very steep aspects, under rocks and walls. Forecast danger level: 1 (low) throughout the territory.
